Ethnic Compound

ETHNIC I (150 SQM)

Ethnic I is a combination between the traditional Joglo of Central Java's Kudus that owns a unique Soko Guru structure with original Balinese wantilan beams that surrounds. The Wantilan originally was used as a place to watch social gatherings in the community space, namely traditional dance, festivities and authentic local ceremonies. It now hangs over the king bed within the villa.

ETHNIC II (175 SQM)

Balinese elements are fused with a traditional Makobang Minahasa house, resulting in this two-storey villa, which exudes warmth and character. Past the open kitchen at the front is the living area reminiscent of a winter cottage that used to watch over the family's workshop. On the upper storey are two cosy bedrooms and a porch that overlooks the pool and gardens of the ethnic compound.

ETHNIC III (105 SQM)

A typical hut from Makobang Minahasa is separated into two bedrooms of Single and Queen bed, an enclosed living area with a daybed, a back porch leading to an open kitchen and dining area and an open front porch overlooking the pool and gardens. Original paintings and wooden carvings add a touch of colour throughout this authentic, traditional house.

ETHNIC IV (150 SQM)

'Joglo' is a type of traditional house of the Javanese that usually can be found especially in Kudus, Central Java. This vernacular house is now transformed into one-bedroom villa and has become one of Alindra's unique and spacious spaces with great positioning overlooking the pool and gardens.

ETHNIC V (125 SQM)

Dating more than a century old, this Balinese community hall of Bualu village, Nusa Dua was rescued from total demolition and transformed into a twin queen bedroom villa. Built in the style of saka roras, literally meaning 'pillars 12', all the original pillars are complementary in keeping the entire building up. An ornate garuda statue keeps watch over the two queen beds, for a peaceful slumber.

ETHNIC VI (105 SQM)

Originally recognized as a place to store grain and other foods in traditional Balinese home, Jimeng is transformed as sleeping space or a place to relax with family, friends or relatives by Alindra Villa. This ethnic villa comes with one Queen Bed decorated with Balinese tropical garden elements in the villa.
